Special Feature from SCVO: Cost of Living & Running Costs Crisis

As the cost of living crisis takes hold, people and communities need voluntary sector services more than ever. At the same time, voluntary organisations face spiralling costs, falling income and an uncertain future. We know that 61% of voluntary organisations are experiencing financial challenges while continuing to see an increased demand for services.

We're here to help with our information on a range of topics, from getting and keeping funding, to business planning and organisational development, to staff retention and reward. Our Information Service is here to help - get in touch if you need us.

The cost-of-living crisis represents a huge and uncertain challenge for voluntary organisations and the people they support, with rising costs eroding available funding to deliver vital programmes and services. While immediate support for voluntary organisations is crucial, back-to-back crises underline the need for long-term solutions to how we fund voluntary organisations.

The cost-of-living crisis is affecting all aspects of running a voluntary organisation, but in particular:

- the cost of materials/supplies, energy and rent increase to unaffordable levels
- salaries fall well behind inflation, making it difficult to support and retain staff
- funding pledges, regular donations, and grants are reduced and devalued
- people have less money available to donate or spend in charity shops

- money held in reserve loses value and is used to prop up public services
- planned services reduce or are stopped altogether to mitigate increased costs

Note: for ease of viewing and jumping between sections and funds, on the lists below you can right-click on each section heading or fund name, select 'expand/collapse' on the menu, and then choose to 'collapse all headings' or 'expand all headings'. This allows you to view either the overall category headings only, or a drop-down list of all funds within a category of interest.
